

Other almanacs show some of the activities that were important to the Postclassic Maya—things like planting and tending their crops, caring for the stingless bees they raised for their honey, making offerings of incense or cacao (the plant that chocolate comes from), hunting and trapping, and weaving.

A deer trapped in a tree snare.

Offerings to the deities who watch over the stingless bees.